Library resources

The Library provides a range of resources to support your research and study including:

- Books
- Academic journals
- Conference proceedings
- Newspapers
- Magazines (trade journals)
Using the right information source

This guide will help you think about:

- The differences between resources
- How you can use them in your academic work
- What they are good for
- What they are not so good for
Books are......

A printed or electronic work of fiction or fact.

Could be a one-off publication or occasionally updated.
Books provide.....

- An overview of a subject and background information
- Quality (edited) information
- Information written by experts

But.....

- Information can be out-of-date
- May not be specific or focused enough
Newspapers are.....

A regular publication containing news about current events, plus informative articles, diverse features and advertising.
Newspapers provide.....

• Daily news and up-to-date information
• Information which is edited for accuracy
• Current issues are readily available
• Useful adverts for jobs, events, new products etc

But.....

• Information can be bias e.g. political
• Articles can be sensationalist
• Older issues can be hard to find
Academic Journals are…..

A regular publication containing substantial articles on a particular academic subject area.
Academic Journals provide…..

- Up-to-date information
- Information which is focused
- Latest ideas, developments and research.
- Written by experts to a high academic standard
- Peer-reviewed articles

But…..

- Information can be very specific
- May be difficult to understand
- Expensive
Conference proceedings are.....

A collection of academic papers distributed after a conference, containing the contributions made by researchers, academics etc.
Conference proceedings provide.....

• Up-to-date information
• Focussed and detailed papers/articles
• Latest ideas and research on a subject
• Stringent selection process, so quality assured

But.....

• Information may be hard to understand
• Can be difficult to locate or obtain
Magazines are.....

A regular publication containing news, updates, features and advertising.

Aimed at a profession, business sector or hobby.
Magazines provide.....

• The latest news
• Concise information
• Useful adverts for jobs, events, new products etc

But.....

• Articles may lack detail
• Information can be bias e.g. adverts/sponsorship
• Old issues may be hard to find
